As companies are finding ways to go back to work, government leaders are shifting their focus from crisis management to recovery and transformation as they seek to best serve their constituents. Despite extraordinary efforts managing public health needs in unprecedented times, there is considerable work to be done. Multiple rounds of federal funding, including The American Rescue Plan Act (ARPA), have provided a foundational framework and billions of dollars to drive recovery and advance priorities that will allow governments to improve service to communities and businesses.

Alvarez & Marsal (A&M) advises governments on innovative ways to transform through strategic allocation of resources, management of federal funding and compliance requirement support. A&M is ideally positioned to partner with leaders and stakeholders in dynamic planning to achieve better performance and execute on strategies that will ensure sustainable improvements.
